Sauce for the Gander. In Ohio the Democratic newspapers re gard the Scott liquor law as very unreasonable. They can't understand how the Re publican party, wicked as it is, could do such a thing; and they are predicting its defeat as a dead certainty. In the Democratic State of Missouri they have a new liquor law, intended for the better regulation of the traffic. There is opposition there, too, and the leading Democratic organ, the St. Louis Republican, Democratic organ, the St. Louis Republican, is moved to take this view:

Democratic organ, the St. Louis Republican, is moved to take this view:

Why is it that the large body of citizens in Missouri engaged in distilling, brewing and selling beverages allow themselves to be presented to the public as cc-operators with the Frohibitionists in attempting to defeat the fair and reas: mable new license law of the state? Are they so blind as not to see that when they succeed in thwarting that law, they only clear the field for a fierce intolerant and unsparing prohibition agitation?

The liquor interests in Missouri could not do a wiser thing than quietly accept and submitto the new law. It is not hostile to that interest. It does, indeed, contain some sever restrictions and impose some intel traponsibilities, but these are offset by advantages which will make the business less hazardors and more profinable to those engaged in it. The new law in neither prohibitary or oppresence, it is only intended to regulate. It reflects the sonie of a large majority of the people of the Brate who are convinced that something must be done to arrest the cells of virtually unlimited and promiscuens liquor celling, and who believe the new is at least a reasonable and judicious experiment. It is easy enough to see that the choice is between it and a tectofal agitation, and that when the saison keepers shall haves: it as ide they will flud themselves face to face with their morts fores, the Prohibitionists.

This argument in the main applies with This argument in the main applies with great force to the situation in Ohio, where the Democratic party is doing all it can to convince the liquor men that they have been treated with inhuman harshness. In fact the Scott law is mildly just and altogether expedient. The Democratic leaders know this, but will not admit it. They want votes, and are bound to have them at any price.

High License in Iowa.

An I Jowa saloon-keeper who was interviewed in Chicago a few days ago gave a cheerful view of a practical experience withhigh license. He pays an annual license of $300, a rent of $720 per annum and expends besides an average of $500 a year to maintain his free-lunch counter. With all this to carry he says he lives well, wears clothes, pays all his bills promptly and yet manages to lay aside a matter of $200 to $300 every year.

The unfortunate differences that divided the Republican party in New York into two hostile camps and caused divisions of less extent and bitterness in the party elsewhere, are now mostly healed. The irreconcilables among the late leaders, if there still are any, have retired to private life or lost their influence, and the great life or lost their influence, and the great hody of the lately warring factions are now standing shoulder to shoulder in the great Republican army. The designations "Stalwart" and "Half-breed" belong almost as much to the dead past as the old political sobrequets "Locofoco" and "Barn-burner." The terms that have gone out of use with Reyublicans may, however, be revived within the Democratic ranks, where the Hoadly Half-breeds are locked upon with unifriendly eyes by the Thurman-Ward Stalwarts. Free trade is simply the natural, unrestricted interchange of products in accordance with one's own personal wishes. It is most desirable, even if it is unattainable. Any interference with it is an evil of greater or less magnitude. A tariff does interfere with it, and any tariff is, therefore, objectionable, whether it is laid for protection or simply for revenue.

Chicago Special to Courier-Journal.

Armour is set down here as worth not less than $20,000,000 individually. The Continental is known as his bank, because he subscribed and paid in $500,000 toward its stock and Black, his former partner and the present cashier of the bank, paid in another $500,000. Armour's wealth can be judged from this fact. John C. Black, a young man in Armour's employ, was taken into partnership in 1877. He was given a one-welfth interest. In 1880 he retired from the firm with over $500,000 as his share of the profits. He very recently returned from Europe and a arted the Continental Bank, Armour contributing one-fourth of the $2.700,000 capital. The belief is here that Armour is heavily loaded with provisions, and that he is supporting the markets on the product, but it is also feit that the load, enormous as it would be to any ordinary the merchant, will be easily handled by the millionaire packer, and that the enormous of the product, but it is also feit that the load, enormous as it would be to any ordinary the merchant, will be easily handled by the millionaire packer, and that the enormous of the product, but it is also feit that the load, enormous as it would be to any ordinary the merchant, will be easily handled by the millionaire packer, and that the enormous of the product, but it is also feit that the load, enormous as it would be to any ordinary the merchant, will be easily handled by the millionaire packer, and that the enormous of the product, but it is also feit that the load, enormous as it would be to any ordinary the merchant, will be easily handled by the millionaire packer, and that the enormous of the product, but it is also feit that the load, the product, but it is also feit that the load, the product, but it is also feit that the load, the product, but it is also feit that the load, the product is will be read with interest of the product o

Look Out for the Chickens,

At both ends of the line there is positive proof that the English Government is making use of the United States in its efforts to palliate the Irish situation. It is sufficient to know that "assisted immigrants" are landing in this country, sent here at the cost to the British Government. Once they are here the home Government washes its hands of them, and cares nothing what becomes of them. They are thrown upon us, and we can let them starve in the streets or support them in our almahouses—that is nothing to the Government which has dumped them at Castle Garden.

The job is admitted in Great Britain. The Irish newspapers are talking about it, dealing with it as a fact, not as a rumor, and they make record of the departures. Mr. Cowen has asked about it in the House of Commons. The London News says, "the gross negligance of shipping them is most cruel," and admits our right to prevent their landing. The News does not say whether it is cruel to the immigrants or to the peeple upon whom they are thrown as a burden.

It is a cruelly which cuts both ways, for there are hardships in store for these pennyless newcomers before they can place themselves on a self-supporting footies. The greatest remaily falls upon the

The State Temperance Convention has completed its work and the members gone home to look after non-committal candidates for the Legislature. But we opine that they won't find any, and thus their work will come to naught.—Wheeling Reg

And is that all? Last year the Register was on hand with its "staff" and told the Convention in column talks what it should do and how to do it; and afterwards said it was well done and that the amendment would be submitted and then when the would be submitted, and then when the fight came on, turned round and fought the measure with all the Glick batteries it could borrow and muster. But this is not the year for a temperance convention to interest the Register—next year, perhaps Meantime the temperance people will try and worry along.

Turn the Hogs Out to Grass,

Pilitohuph Stockman.
Old stock-raisers well know the importance of allowing a range of pasture to growing hogs. Health and thrift are not in keeping with the idea of too close confinement, on an unvarying diet. To prevent disease in the herd, to best secure a continuous and normal growth, and to produce the sweetest and most wholesome pork, there ahould be at least a moderate allowance of grassy range. Under a system of this kind, with a fair intermingling of forage crops with the corn fed, swine diseases would be almost unknown. A too great departure from nature's way in the care of domestic animals is never followed by the best results, and when the feeder fatty contravenes nature's laws he very often does so to his cost. often does so to his cost.

How the Bog Marshalled the Sheep.

A flock of sheep blocked up the entrance to a bridge spanning Mill Creek, near Chester Park, Ohio. A large shepherd dog had been trying to get the sheep to cross the bridge, but they were suspicious and held back. Presently the dog, discouraged at his unsuccessful effort to drive them, leaped upon the backs of the sheep, which in their crowded condition looked like one wooly floor, ran along the bridge entrance, leaped upon the floor, and, seizing in his mouth the neck of one of the ewes, dragged her along on to the bridge. Once on the floor of the bridge the old ewe's suspicions were allayed, and she trotted on across, followed by the whole flock, while the dog stepped to one side, let them all pass, and trotted along behind.
